"DEVIL'S CORKSCREW"

Of the many fossils which have come out of the mountains and plains of the West, few have excited more interest than the "Devil's Corkscrew" found in rocks of the Miocene period.

In northern Nebraska. They are unusually white and stand clearly against the bluish background of the rock which encloses them.

They are of the shape of a corkscrew, with many twists and turns, ending at times in a large bulb with occasional side passages.

When first discovered it was thought that these gigantic "corkscrews" were huge petrified vines or roots of some strange plant. Study of the "corkscrew" however, failed to reveal any traces of plant structure.

Later the skeleton of an animal like the badger was found in a large bulb near the end of the "corkscrew," and bones of a small camel and small deer were found in others. After that it was discovered that many of them contained bones of a small burrowing animal about the size of the western pocket gopher. Excavation of actual recent prairie dog burrows, after filling them with plaster of Paris, showed an interesting fact, the burrows of the prairie dog and the prehistoric "corkscrews" were closely similar. The mystery is considered solved.—Detroit News.

FROM THE CONSULAR REPORTS

Seventy-five per cent of Holland's diamond workers are now idle, and about 45 per cent in the tobacco industry. Only 20 per cent of the bricklayers are out of employment.

Flowing by tractors is being encouraged by the French government.

The Philippines will soon have aerial mail service.
